

Miriam Robeson has been in the private practice of law for more than 20 years, with a focus in nonprofit, corporate, tax, and agriculture law. Miriam serves as corporate counsel to several nonprofit boards, guides small and medium-sized nonprofits through the ever-tightening path of government regulation, and counsels clients on business and tax planning issues. Miriam speaks throughout the state of Indiana on matters nonprofit formation and governance and farm business planning, and works with the Indiana Nonprofit Resource Network and Purdue Extension in developing educational programs to serve the nonprofit and agriculture industries.

In her home community, Miriam volunteers with the Flora Community Club, the Carroll County Economic Development Corporation and the Carroll County Agriculture Association, as well as serves as a Sunday School teacher and choir director in her church. Miriam also visits elementary through high school classrooms to talk about volunteerism and American constitutional law.

Miriam graduated from Indiana University School of Law – Indianapolis and has a Bachelor of Science degree from Purdue's Krannert School of Management. She is a member of the Carroll County Agriculture Association, the Flora Community Club, the American Bar Association, the Indiana State Bar Association, the Carroll County Bar Association, and serves on the Agriculture Council of the Indiana State Bar Association.